THE AFGHAN VAMPIRES BOOK CLUB

Gary Barker and Michael Kaufman

WORLD EDITIONS · 28th May 2015 · £10.99 · Trade paperback / ebook available

'A riveting story of love and war, palpably real and horrifically phantasmagorical... A marriage of American Sniper and Heart of Darkness. I read it straight through in one sitting.' JANE FONDA

The letter was headed: 'The Afghan Vampires Book Club: An Invitation.'

We were to gather the most improbable, disturbing, and unbelievable stories coming out of the two-and-a-half decades of the Afghan War. 'The goal, my dear friends, is to figure out if the story is true or pure invention.'

In the 25th year of the US-Afghan War, two hundred US soldiers are massacred. Amongst the growing number of discarded veterans, rumours circulate that one soldier made it out alive. When British journalist John Fox finally tracks down Captain Tanner Jackson, he hears an astonishing tale of violence, conspiracy and revenge - but also of enduring love. Part anti-war fable, part page-turning dystopian adventure, The Afghan Vampires Book Club is a thrillingly contemporary novel about America's war in Afghanistan. This satirical examination of how the US treats its war veterans will reshape your understanding of what endless war inflicts, not only on the men and women who become soldiers, but on us all.

About the authors:

Gary Barker (US, 1961) is a writer, educational psychologist and human rights activist. He is the founder of Promundo, an organisation that works in Latin America and Africa to engage men in ending violence against women. Two of his novels, Luisa's Last Words and Mary of Kivu, were published in the Netherlands to critical acclaim.

Michael Kaufman (US, 1951) is the author of eight novels and non-fiction books. For over thirty years he has worked internationally to engage men and boys to promote gender equality and end men's violence.
